

Washroom Dignity in the workplace

For many individuals who experience menstruation or bladder/bowel control issues, accessing essential care products such as pads, tampons, and incontinence supplies can be a challenge. This can lead to feelings of shame and stigma, as well as difficulties in maintaining hygiene and dignity in public spaces, including the workplace.

Providing free access to menstruation and incontinence care products in the workplace is an important step towards addressing this issue, as it can help to alleviate some of the financial burdens and emotional stress associated with these conditions, and promote greater equality and inclusivity in the workplace.

At Initial Hygiene we strongly believe that both incontinence and menstruation welfare solutions should be free and widely accessible to both persons who menstruate or those managing incontinence issues whilst at their place of work. That is why we have partnered with Essity, one of the world's leading manufacturers of period and incontinence products, to launch Washroom Dignity.

MENSTRUATION

Believe everyone has a right to access a safe, clean and hygienic washroom

Are more concerned with the levels of hygiene in the washroom post covid

Believe the employer has an obligation to supply menstrual products free of charge

Believe you can catch disease from a sanitary waste bin

Say the workplace could do more to support good menstrual hygiene

INCONTINENCE

Of those with urinary incontinence in the community are women

Women living in the community with urinary incontinence are under the age of 50

Australian women who suffer from incontinence

Australian men who suffer from incontinence

Projected number of people suffering with incontinence issues by 2030

Insights from Menstruation and Incontinence surveys in Australia

Washroom Dignity by Initial Hygiene

Vend and dispose menstruation, incontinence products or both. Male, female or gender neutral washroom suitable.

Free dispensing of products | Wall Mounted Dispenser

Capable of dispensing tampon
period pad incontinence pad incontinence liner

Wide range of bins available | Various options to suit all washroom and cubicle sizes

Replenished & maintained as part of the Initial Hygiene service - Libra and Tena